

Laredo's Trade with the World

Presented by WorldCity President Ken Roberts
at the 23rd annual Logistics and Manufacturing Symposium

September 2016

First, the bad news

- U.S. trade is down 5.41 percent through July.

First, the bad news

- U.S. trade is down 5.41 percent through July.
- Seven of the top 10 U.S. exports are down, including a 21 percent decrease in gasoline, the No. 2 export.

First, the bad news

- U.S. trade is down 5.41 percent through July.
- Seven of the top 10 U.S. exports are down, including a 21 percent decrease in gasoline, the No. 2 export.
- Five of the top 10 U.S. imports are down, with oil, previously the top import, now ranking behind vehicles and cell phones – and down 33 percent this year.

First, the bad news

- U.S. trade is down 5.41 percent through July.
- Seven of the top 10 U.S. exports are down, including a 21 percent decrease in gasoline, the No. 2 export.
- Five of the top 10 U.S. imports are down, with oil, previously the top import, now ranking behind vehicles and cell phones – and down 33 percent this year.
- Trade at nine of the nation's top 10 "ports" is down this year.

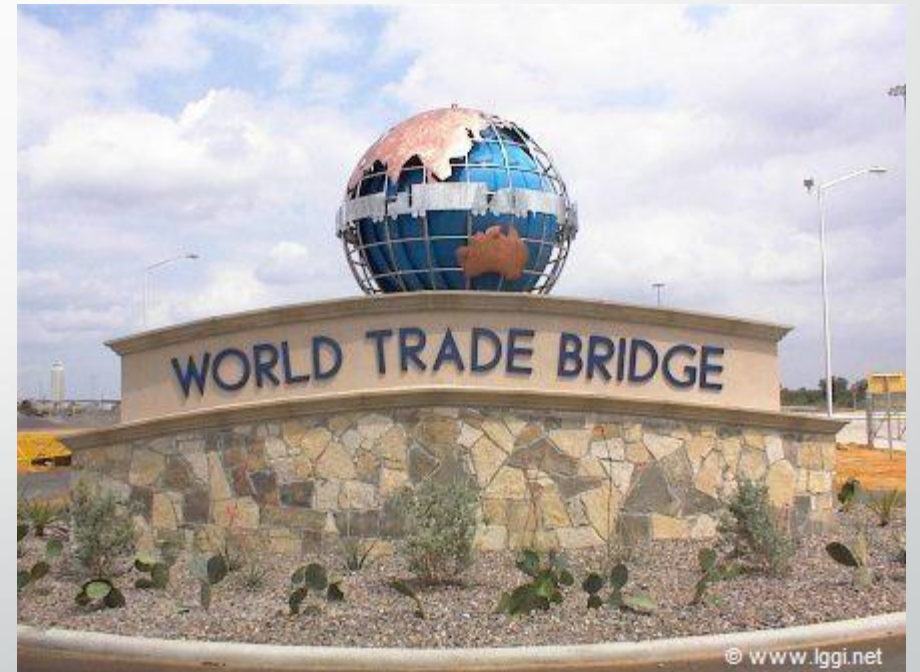

First, the bad news

- U.S. trade down 5.41 percent through July.
- Seven of the top 10 U.S. exports are down, including a 21 percent decrease in gasoline, the No. 2 export.
- Five of the top 10 U.S. imports are down, with oil, previously the top import, now ranking behind vehicles and cell phones – and down 33 percent this year.
- Trade at nine of the nation's top 10 "ports" is down this year.
- Trade with nine of the nation's top 10 trade partners is down this year.

Now, the good news. (Sort of)

- The “Port” of Laredo’s trade is down 3.77 percent this year – a smaller decline than the overall U.S. average and better than four of the top 10 other ports.

Now, the good news. (Sort of)

- The “Port” of Laredo’s trade is down 3.77 percent this year – a smaller decline than the overall U.S. average and better than four of the top 10 other ports.
- Laredo remained the second most important port in the United States, trailing only the Port of Los Angeles.

Now, the good news. (Sort of)

- The “Port” of Laredo’s trade is down 3.77 percent this year – a smaller decline than the overall U.S. average and better than four of the top 10 other ports.
- Laredo remained the second most important port in the United States, trailing only the Port of Los Angeles.
- While Laredo’s trade with Mexico fell faster than its trade with the rest of the United States – down 3.59 percent and 2.55 percent, respectively – Laredo still accounts for more than twice that of any other port.

Now, the good news. (Relatively speaking.)

- The “Port” of Laredo’s trade is down 3.77 percent this year – a smaller decline than the overall U.S. average and better than four of the top 10 other ports.
- Laredo remained the second most important port in the United States, trailing only the Port of Los Angeles.
- While Laredo’s trade with Mexico fell faster than its trade with the rest of the United States – down 3.59 percent and 2.55 percent, respectively – Laredo still accounts for more than twice that of any other port.
- Laredo’s nation-leading motor vehicle part imports are up 3.92 percent, while overall imports into the United States are flat.

